Flowers in a field with the sun setting, sun rising, and water on the horizon calms me. Spectrums of color catch my eye as warm hue contrasts cool hue and keeps me looking. The black medium darkens transparency to challenge the imagination. I like painting with pastels.

Fall colors in nature along the water remind me of childhood when wonders and awe captivated my mind. My childhood held me in hope of the future with its unknown. I had hope of the better life to come. Better life was undefined in my early years as it had yet to form in understanding. However, better life is known to me today, lived with every new one, and I still hope for more in a future unknown. So, I look back and remember nature's influence to think of nature's influence now. Awe and wonder still remain.

My artwork helps me to communicate my inner peace, experience, and understanding. Creating images, shapes, lines, compositions, and textures displays my gratitude for the gifts undeserved and part of my life. Thank you PCAP
