

Gator Dunn

313-20

Boatride on the River

I find that drawing satisfies my boredom. I just started drawing a couple of years ago. After drawing I became interested in colored pencil over painting because it's cleaner and I think more closely related to drawing. I like the versatility with colored pencil.

I saw an image similar to the picture I drew and liked it so I decided to make it my own. I focused more on the log coming out of the water in front to take away from the blurry jungle background. It's drawn in a way to try and take your vision from the log to the bird then to the people in the boat, never really paying attention to the background. That's also why I put the vines and leafy branches over the jungle background, to help cover it up. Thank you