

Irony: That which adopts the meaning of which is contrary to the literal sense of the work.

Mask: To disguise; to cover; to hide:

With "Irony", you see the proverbial mask we use to hide our flaws. The "I'm always happy", "you can't hurt me", "I'm tough". The mask has more, far worse flaws, with its hollow eyes, crooked nose, unmoving lips, cold hard skin. Even with the lips painted, the eyes highlighted, the feathered hair, it's lifeless!

Then there's the mirror. When we look in it, the eyes show our emotions. The nose, not all bent out of shape. The lips that can give a soothing word, or an "I love you". The skin, warm and soft to the touch. These are the "flaws" we try to hide. But they are no "flaws", they are the very definition of REAL BEAUTY.

Dennis Rich
#598960