The Butterflies on this vase symbolize the profound transformation of the ugly caterpillar into a beautiful Butterfly.

Similarly, they represent the transformation I am undergoing here at prison.

A journey from being an ugly worm in society, to become a better person, capable of soaring on my own after enduring the struggles of self improvement.

Each Butterfly on the vase also reflects the individuality of the many men imprisoned in here. Just as no two Butterflies in nature are completely identical, each man faces his own unique challenges to overcome. Despite these differences, we share a common goal to grow, improve, and become the better individuals our families, society, and most importantly, we ourselves know that we can be.

For me personally it is deeply meaningful. I am committed to never returning to the system, and becoming the best version of myself.

This journey though difficult, is one I embrace whole heartedly, as I strive to become the best person I can be.
