

Artist Name: David Lester #720334

This has been my 8th year of painting for PCAP and it's been a true blessing to do this for you guys. To get my art work out in the world has been a blessing. To let people see my stuff and not judge me for my past. To open up their eyes that not all people in prison is bad. People do change and open up their eyes to the things that ~~are~~^{they} are missing out. And for me it's my paintings.

I paint only on black backgrounds all the time to let people feel the colors that I put into my paints, to enjoy the feeling of happiness with each painting I do. If I put a smile on someone's face with my paintings, it's a blessing to me. I feel out all my painting with how I think someone will react to, it would be with each painting on a black background I want people to see that beauty can come from the darkness, and that's how my mind has been for years. Not know what my purpose was, or just being alone for many years, and not feeling wanted at all. When you are in a black place like this, you feel like you are in a bad dream just ~~when~~ walking a round, with no hope in your mind at all, and you think what is the point to keep moving forward in life. And no one care at all. I want people know that all of us have a purpose in our life, and there is hope. We just have to take a chance in life and don't care what anyone says. We must let people ~~see~~^{see} the beauty in us with out judgment.
