Art is an outlet for me, it's like therapy. When I paint it's a form of expression. How I release all the joy, happiness, pain, anger, fear, and peace that life brings. Painting takes my mind to a different place, it's a form of healing for my soul. I take pride in my work and I always want people to feel the emotions coming through my work. The main thing I would love for people to understand by looking at my piece is that life is full of seasons. We can go from broken places to beautiful places, but it's so much more than that. We can have wonderful things and people taken from us or lose them in many different ways. Even in the times where that does happen, it's only inevitable for some form of growth to come from it. Never give up and never stop dreaming.
