What Lines Define You

They say art is subjective; Each person decides what they feel is art, and isn't. I disagree. I think everything is art. The trees in the wind, the fur on a dog, the gravel in a peice of concrete, a smile, a laugh, a song, a dance. Whether some body thinks something is art or not does not lessen its value. There is art and beauty in everything. To me, what is subjective is whether or not someone is willing to look for the beauty or not. How many times have you walked through the door of your house? Of those how many times have you paused to observe its uniqueness and beauty? Is it wood? Metal? Painted? Glass? Carved? Solid? Heavy? You see, even a door can be art to the right person, why not let that person be art to you? Art is subjective, which subject do you find most intrequing?
