The truck in Graphite is something I dream of finding one day and reviving. I also liked the challenges it threw at me. Giving depth and contrast in black & white is a fun challenge for me.

The truck in oil paint presents some of the same challenges and is a mirrored image which made it harder for me to replicate. I did it this way to sharpen my artistic abilities.

The cowboy drawing was something that caught my attention because I thought it had unique challenges of capturing a hard clay's work.

The Girl on the pier. (Loss) It resembles loss and despair. It reminds me of a girl whose mental scars may never be able to be repaired?

The Train Car. (The road to nowhere.)

I just really love the content. It was very challenging. I could see myself sitting in there on a warm summer's day just enjoying the serenity and peace of mind.

PCAP

Has provided a great way to express my artistic abilities and I am very grateful.

Art has helped me feel like I can be seen again. It gives me a certain piece and serenity that helps me escape the prison that is depression and anxiety.

I also help others seek these things through Art classes that I facilitate and co-facilitate.

The joy it gives me knowing that I can give people the feelings of accomplishment, feels amazing.

Knowing that there can be this kind of positivity brought into such a dark place in a person's life because of art and because of myself is amazing.

Thank you P.C.A.P for helping all of us Sincerely
