Although I had a cursory understanding of the "problems" plaguing the American criminal justice system before my arrest and incarceration, it was not until I went through the system firsthand that I realized how monstrously draconian, exploitative, and economically selective it truly is. Prisons are a billion-dollar industry and human lives are the principal raw materials. Through my present submissions, I am seeking to convey these truths to the viewer with imagery that is highly evocative yet darkly humorous.

One of my submissions, however, is quite "neutral" and simply a beautiful image of a dragonfly - one of nature's most stunning creatures in my opinion.
