

Johnathan Parkkila

177-20

Oeahoo (Oi-Ha-Hou)

Something within human consciousness seems to demand that we create symbols of subjective experience to reaffirm our existence on the stage of life. There seems to be an organic impulse within the psyche, irrespective of one's race, sex, culture or creed, that propels one to regard or consider oneself within a social context or structure.

It is my belief that underneath the myriad forms within each person's consciousness, there are base line templates that correspond to larger more macro-cosmic events and planes of existence.

It is my mission to reunite and illuminate the similarities of men and women, and their relationship to their environment as a whole by spontaneous realization. My wish is to propel viewers into higher states of contemplation and awareness.