"Instinctual Turmoil" is based on our instincts to go into rage when we feel vulnerable, as sort of a protection of the trauma we feel, by being in prison, where being ~~vulnerable~~ vulnerable/nice can be detrimental... There's another angle to this piece... the shame we feel when our anger is exposed, because we have let the ugly side of us out, when (9) times out of (10) our anger was released over something petty and now we've created an enemy and we hide the shame behind the anger, creating an on edge/anxious mindset... finally, the other angle is our anger can also stem from the loneliness caused by not having a significant other, whom we look towards for comfort, calming presence, and someone to look forward to sharing that moment of being released from prison... When we are in the midst of all of these angles, we go into turmoil without the ability to get back discipline, searching for material things to distract us, but never finding them fulfilling — like looking for missing pieces of puzzle, that was never stored in the box.

"Just 4 Fun, Outside The Box", is dedicated to my first Granddaughter, who told me she had a pet fly, because she refused to be boxed into the idea of what little girls are suppose to do and like... Also, I had fun doing this and the time it took.
