Our Liberties Under Fire

At the age of a young boy I always had a desire to draw, but at the age of 15 I drew my first picture of "Superman and the Silver Surfer" During middle school and High school I took art classes, but I did not take art seriously until I was incarcerated. It was during this time my mother encouraged me to start drawing, and since then I have never looked back! The composition with deals with the current situation we as Americans (mostly of color and Hispanics) are facing with our rights citizens to be free from injustice, social and economical inequality are being threatened by the one leader in authority whose sworn duty is to protect those whose rights and freedoms are being threatened. The same situation we faced in the era of The Civil War, we are presently facing now. I deal with social issues because I am troubled with what I see in our Government, so I try to find the best avenue to express my views, through my art, hopefully it causes people to really, really think about how are we (Americans) will be this great country back together? During the civil war men pay a high price for the freedoms and rights we enjoy as American citizens! What will we do to honor their death
