It was my intended goal this year to continue the exploration of the sculpting/carrying techniques that I discovered using acrylic paint, glitter emulsions and vellum paper. For the first time I created two pieces with a specific theme in mind during the creation process. One represents the burden of my juvenile life sentence being lifted off of me. I actually did complete the piece the night before I went to court to receive a term of years sentence in place of the juvenile life sentence that I had since I was 17. I wanted to take those techniques to a higher level exploring the 3D effects to make a 2D piece pop off the back ground. While another piece was representative of the new pathways now open to me after my release from prison. This piece also represents the new pathways of thinking that come from maturation and growth found in positive programming.
